- Overview
- heat and human health – air temperature, relative humidity effects of certain medications and alcohol – people at risk (i.e. elderly)
- direct effects and indirect effects
- heat alert protocol- selecting trigger and response
- role of cooling centres
- elements of response
- previous vs proposed approach
- recommendations outlined in staff report

Doctor Hodge responded to questions posed by the Board members.

1. Thomas Cooper, Community Development Coordinator, McQuesten Legal and Community Services  (Added 4.1)

    Thomas Cooper made a PowerPoint presentation and provided copies of a City of Toronto staff report entitled Hot Weather Response Plan Update for distribution.

Thomas Cooper indicated that he is disappointed in the lack of community response included in the staff report on today’s agenda. He advised that some residents are at risk, such as seniors, persons with disabilities, (including the mentally ill) young children, people who are homeless and people living in low income housing.

He said the report includes limited consultation with the community groups and provides far too little to address health risks. He questioned whether Hamilton doesn’t experience the same extreme heat as Toronto since it has the 3rd highest humidex reading in Canada. He is requesting a more proactive response such as other Cities are developing. Toronto, for example, is more progress and is expanding its cooling centres.

Tom Cooper presented the following recommendations for the summer of 2007:

- The development of a pilot project cooling centre – could use the Riverdale Community Centre
- Proactive outreach for vulnerable tenants living in rooming houses, residential care facilities, etc.
- The establishment of meaningful consultation with community agencies to determine appropriate measures for extreme heat response.
- Collect data from hospitals and medical centres to map neighbourhoods where heat induced illness is highest.

In moving forward he recommended the following:

- Community based cooling centres in partnership with community groups.
- Establish a new extreme heat protocol for buildings and common room cooling centres.
- Work with community agencies to establish a volunteer program.

- Provide an education program to rooming house tenants and landlords and residential care facilities tenants and landlords respecting the dangers of extreme heat.

The Board received Mr. Cooper’s presentation.

2. Denise Brooks, Executive Director, Hamilton Urban Core Community Health Centre (Added 4.2)

Denise Brooks made a verbal presentation and she provided a hard copy which was distributed.

She too expressed concerns with the limited community consultation and the vulnerability of some of the residents and the need for an appropriate response strategy when a heat alert is issued.

The Board received Ms. Brook’s presentation.

A discussion followed on developing an adequate response strategy and the Board amended the staff recommendation by adding subsections (c) and (d) and approved the report as amended.

At 10:30 a.m. the Mayor vacated the Chair and left the meeting and Deputy Mayor Jackson assumed the Chair.
